HONOLULU, HAWAII—The over-the-top fashion and fantasy-inspired installation design of Harajuku: Tokyo Street Fashion has made it a hit with visitors of all ages. This month Bank of Hawaii Family Sunday: Mori and Steam focuses on this wonderland of an exhibition.

“Mori and Steam” refers to two fashion genres in Harajuku fashion culture. “Mori” means “forest” in Japanese, and the look is marked by natural, earthy colors of layers, often incorporating elements of crochet, knit and lace. Steampunk fashion is what one might find in an H.G. Wells or Jules Verne novel—a look that is simultaneously Victorian and futuristic.

Kids can make pins using tulle, buttons, beads, flowers, twigs, leather, watch gears and lace—it’s up to them to go mori or steampunk with their creativity. Then they can make a pair of steampunk goggles using different colored lenses and see the world in a whole new light.

Families can enjoy the jazzy feel-good sounds of Hook + Line in Central Courtyard 11:15 a.m.-12 pm. Then 12-3 p.m. they can watch artist Roy Chang in the gallery as he sketches live models dressed in Harajuku fashion. Kids can also color and decorate characters designed by the artist.

This month's Family Film Sunday selection is the Japanese indie children's comedy Hello! Junichi. The movie tells the story of a timid third grader named Junichi, who tries to muster the confidence to return an eraser to his crush, and form a band with his friends so they can put on a concert for his friend's mother's birthday.

Family Film Sunday is free. In fact, children age 17 and under receive free admission to all films and concerts at the Doris Duke Theatre (except on festival opening nights)

The museum invites visitors to enter the popular monthly drawing contest, for children ages 1 to 17. The museum gives contestants a theme and drawing supplies.

The winner receives a Supporting-level membership to the Honolulu Museum of Art ($100 value), and his or her artwork is used to create the following month's event brochure and is posted on the museum website. Last month six-year-old Summer Itall won with her interpretation of Mori and Steam.

FAMILY DAY AT SPALDING HOUSE

Take a free shuttle up to Spalding House where the fun continues. Kids can make kawaii (cute) accessories depicting rainbows, cupcakes and kittens out of clay, which they can attach to a key chain. At Spalding House Café Susie Roth brings a little magic to the popular storytelling sessions.

About Bank of Hawaii Family Sunday

Since 2004, the third Sunday of every month at the Honolulu Museum of Art has been free to the public, thanks to Bank of Hawaii. Each event features a program of art activities, entertainment and demonstrations held throughout the museum.
